II. Guided Questions: Reading Comprehension 40%

A few years ago, I was employed¹ by McDonald's. On "Ronald Day," I would dress up as Ronald McDonald and visit children in community hospitals. I really enjoyed the opportunity to make these children's day a little more joyful.

However, although I loved my job, it could be emotionally draining occasionally. There were clear rules that I had to follow. First, it was important that I never go anywhere alone while on duty because my costume might surprise or scare little kids. Also, it was essential that I never touch the kids since I might give them my germs. I didn't like this regulation because I often wanted to hold their hands or hug them, but I could be fired for violating the rule.

1. What did the narrator do on Ronald Day?
2. Name one of the rules that the narrator had to follow.
3. What might happen if the narrator touch the kids in the community hospitals?
4. Why didn't the narrator like the regulation?
5. What would happen if the narrator violated the rule?

One day, when I had finished my job and was about to leave, I heard a little boy calling, “Ronald, Ronald!” He looked only about six, but he was hooked up to more electronic equipment than I had ever seen. His parents told me his name was Billy and he was a cancer victim. I wanted to cheer him up, so I sat down to do some magic tricks for him. When I got up to say goodbye, he asked, “Ronald, would you hug me?”

I really wanted to hug him, but a voice in my head reminded me that I couldn’t—I’d lose my job. I told Billy that I wasn’t allowed to and suggested that we color a picture instead. Upon completing our picture, he again asked for a hug. Looking into his hopeful eyes, I didn’t know what I could say. I didn’t want to lose my job, but deep down, I knew that I would regret it if I turned down his request.

6. How did the little boy look in the paragraph?
7. What disease did the boy suffer from?
8. What did the narrator do to cheer Billy up?
9. Did the narrator accept Billy’s request to hug him?
10. What did the narrator suggest that they do instead?
