In the Kruger National Park, South Africa, new life was given to abandoned transportation facilities. After the park was established in 1926, visitors could access it only through the Selati Railway line. The trains on this line would stop overnight on Selati Railway Bridge. The guests found it amazing to wake up and enjoy the stunning view. In 1973, the railway line was closed because the trains had been running into too many animals. Now, one of the original trains is parked permanently on the bridge and has been converted into a luxury hotel called Kruger Shalati. The hotel has 31 African-style rooms, and each one has floor-to-ceiling windows for admiring the view. The rooms were designed with a combination of old facilities and new decorations. If the hotel owner had not made the unique accommodation, people might have forgotten the trains forever.

19. When was the park established?
20. Why was the Selati Railway line closed in 1973?
21. What has the train on the railway line been converted into?
22. How did the author describe the rooms in Kruger Shalati?

In Sweden, an old silver mine was also brought back to life. For four centuries, the Sala Silver Mine was the country's largest. During that time, miners extracted over 400 tons of silver, and most of it was used for making coins. By 1908, however, the precious metal had run out. A network of empty tunnels and chambers was left behind until some creative people found a way to make use of it. If they had not done so, the Sala Silvermine Hotel would not have been born. Thanks to their efforts, guests can now descend into the mine to depths of up to 155 meters and stay overnight in one of the old chambers. While parts of the mine are chilly, the rooms are kept at a comfortable temperature. The only inconvenience is that cellphones don't have any reception at such depths! Staying in one of these rooms is the perfect way to immerse oneself in Sweden's mining past.

24. In which country is the Sala Silver Mine located?
25. When did the metal in the mine run out?
26. Where do guests of Sala Silvermine Hotel stay nowadays?
27. What seems to be the only inconvenience of staying in the Sala Silvermine Hotel?
